

ENVIRONMENT

Phone turned to dust to help recycling bid

Scientists have blended a mobile phone to dust to conduct a chemical analysis of what it contains to spur on greater recycling of the devices. Plymouth University researchers ground and dissolved it in acid and found 33g of iron, 13g of silicon and 7g of chromium. Each phone also had 90mg of silver and 36mg of gold.